A NEW KIND OF REUNION?

We are very excited about a new initiative designed to make your relationship with your alma mater even stronger.

For some time we've been assessing Reunion and now we need your input to design programs you want to attend.

Currently classes return to campus in five-year increments: For instance, classes ending in "3" and "8" attended last June. This year, however, the classes of 1953 and 1954 combined and the results were gratifying. People found more friends with whom they'd attended school as well as people who shared their interests.

This success made us rethink every aspect of Reunion. Would you prefer it in the fall, on a football weekend? How about Reunions on different weekends for different classes? Should some Reunions be in the fall and others in the spring? Do you think Reunions by decades would be better, so classes of the fifties, for instance, would all return together?

Reunions held by decade offer several advantages. You'd find people who were in school before, during, and after your four years here. We've heard from alumni who want to meet with people who remember "their" era and shared the same events. Decade reunions could be designed around specific alumni interests, recreational wishes, their memories of campus, and even the music they recall. For younger alumni we could add more activities for children, something often requested.

As you can see, we want to explore all possibilities. Please remember that these changes are still in the talking stage. We're working with a subcommittee of the National Alumni Association Board of Directors, and we very much want to hear from you as well. Please get in touch.

On a personal note, I must tell you how delighted I am with the warm welcome I've received from alumni around the country. I appreciate your generous acceptance.

Associate Vice President for Alumni Relations

You're going to love Homecoming this year, when students and alumni gather on campus for one of the liveliest weekends of the year. Don't miss it!

HOMECOMING '98: NOVEMBER 13 TO 15

It's in the air! A brisk fall weekend, SU football against Virginia Tech, parades, academic open houses, and lots of time with old friends. For the classes of 1983, 1988, and 1993, Homecoming is a double treat, because it will be their Reunion weekend, with special activities just for them at a time when the campus is at its most active.

Barry Weiss '83 is working hard with other classmates to plan activities for his class. "The fall is a wonderful time to visit campus," he says. "My classmates will see what campus is like today, busy and exciting, instead of in June when there's less going on. It will be more like the SU they remember, but with some new things added."

For the Class of 1993, Keith Flynn says his committee is working on two plans, depending on whether the game is in the afternoon or evening. "Our events will center around the great new Goldstein Alumni and Faculty Center," he says. "Young alumni prefer coming to a Reunion that incorporates a football game."

You'll receive a copy of the jam-packed schedule of events as soon as you reach campus. Before that, you can contact the Office of Alumni Relations for information and advice on where to stay, parking, and activities. E-mail sualumni@syr.edu for all the latest information.

Young Alumni Party

This year, as in the past, young alumni are invited back for a Homecoming party. We welcome all young alumni to a pre-game party on Saturday at the new Goldstein Alumni and Faculty Center. The pay-as-you-go celebration starts two-and-a-half hours before the game. Call or e-mail to let us know you're coming.

RECREATION FACILITIES

Get ready to sweat! Alumni may now use the University's recreation facilities by purchasing an alumni guest pass. These facilities include Archbold gymnasiums and pool, Flanagan Gymnasium, Archbold Fitness Centers, Women's Building recreation facilities and pool, Goldstein Fitness Center, and Marion Fitness Center.

Alumni may also participate in the Wellness Program (which offers personal training, Fitchek Clinics, etc.) and the Fitness and Leisure Program (which offers such noncredit fitness classes as aerobics and yoga). Alumni may not participate in intramurals or club sports.

You may buy an alumni guest pass from Recreation Services during business hours, 8:30 a.m. to 5 p.m. Spouses and domestic partners of alumni are not eligible. To use the facilities, you must also present an alumni card, available from the Office of Alumni Relations.

For more information contact Recreation Services at 315-443-4386.

REUNION AWARDS

Several awards were given during Reunion '98 recognizing outstanding alumni.

Arents Pioneer Medal

The George Arents Pioneer Medal, SU's highest award to alumni, went to four distinguished individuals.

M. Elizabeth Carnegie G'52 of Chevy Chase, Md., has spent more than 50 years advancing the status of African Americans in nursing. During the 1940s she was assistant director of the Hampton Institute School of Nursing, and was dean and professor at the Florida A&M College School of Nursing. In 1953 she joined the American Journal of Nursing Co., holding key editorial roles for 25 years. Since retiring, she's been active as a visiting professor, consultant, and writer.

Sports agent David Falk '72 of Rockville, Md., is one of the most powerful people in professional sports, representing such athletes as Michael Jordan and Patrick Ewing. He and a partner formed Falk Associates Management Enterprises in 1992. He is a founding member of SU's Washington, D.C., Advisory Board.

Before retiring from broadcasting at the age of 75, Marty Glickman '39 of New York City called more than 1,000 football games, 3,000 college and professional basketball games, and 2,100 track and field meets. In 1936 he won a spot on the U.S. Olympic track and field team, but his chances of winning a gold medal were crushed when he and teammate Sam Stoller were banned from competing at the Berlin Games, presumably because they were Jewish. He is in the Sportscasters Hall of Fame, the Professional Basketball Hall of Fame, and the New York Sports Hall of Fame. Glickman is an SU LetterWinner of Distinction.

Alan Rafkin '50 of Rollins, Mont., has devoted his long career in television to making people laugh. He directed such sitcoms as I Dream of Jeannie, The Andy Griffith Show,

The Dick Van Dyke Show, and *M*A*S*H*. In 1982 he won an Emmy for producing and directing One Day at a Time. More recently, he has directed Coach and Suddenly Susan. He has established the Alan Rafkin Endowed Scholarship Fund at the S.I. Newhouse School of Public Communications.

Eggers Senior Alumni Awards

The following individuals received the Melvin A. Eggers Senior Alumni Award for outstanding service.

Douglas Cagwin '41 of Fayetteville, N.Y., held positions with the Central New York Community Foundation, and worked with Plaza Health and Rehabilitation Center and Enriched Resources for Independent Elderly.

Anne Pinck Easter '35 of Skaneateles, N.Y., helped cultivate donors for the construction of Day and Flint halls. Following the death of her husband, she assumed leadership of their business, Midcourt Builders Corp.

L. Edgar Prina '38 of Washington, D.C., was a journalist for the New York Sun, Washington Star, and Copley News Service. Currently a freelance writer, Prina is an expert on military and Pentagon issues.

Dean's Outstanding Alumni Awards

Eight alumni received Dean's Outstanding Alumni Awards for service and loyalty to their colleges or excellence in their professions.

College of Arts and Sciences: William J. Brodsky '65, G'68, chair and CEO of the Chicago Board Options Exchange; and Thomas Moore G'75 of Wilton, N.H., psychotherapist and best-selling author.

School of Education: William E. Sanford '63, G'70, SU varsity crew coach.

College for Human Development: Carol W. Bernstein '73 of Atlanta, executive director and founder of Project MAGIC (Making AIDS Go Away In Children); and Nancy Gere O'Neil '48 of Syracuse, home economics teacher and volunteer.

College of Nursing: M. Elizabeth Carnegie, G'52 (see Arents Medal section); and Kerry Turley G'98 of San Francisco, pediatric cardiac surgery nurse.

WIND IN THE WILLOWS

It was Syracuse on Broadway when Syracuse Stage and the SU Drama Department brought Wind in the Willows, a children's play, to New York City for a brief run during June. More than 7,500 people attended the charming musical in the heart of the theater district.

Audiences met the characters first created by children's author Kenneth Grahame. The cast included a number of Drama Department graduates. The play was adapted from Grahame's novel by SU Professor Gerardine Clark, who co-directed the production with Professor Anthony Salatino.

Opening weekend was festive, according to John Allen, executive director of University Relations for New York City, who led the committee organizing the event.

"Trustee Gerry Cramer took the cast and visiting dignitaries on a yacht club cruise for the day on Friday," Allen says. "At the opening performance, the University bought out the entire theater and invited alumni and friends to bring their children and grandchildren at no cost."

It was even better when the reviews appeared and the play was highly praised. "Being invited to New York City was a testament to the excellence of our drama program and was a remarkable tool to reach new students," Allen says.

Featured in the New York City production of Syracuse Stage's Wind in the Willows were (from left) Timothy Fitz-Gerald as Rat and Eric Collins as Mole.

ALUMNI DIRECTORY

The new SU Alumni Directory, to be distributed soon, will be available in a printed version (in hard or soft cover) or on CD-ROM for Windows or Mac. The directory features an alphabetical section, a class-year section, a geographic section, a career networking section, and an e-mail section. You can order the SU Alumni Directory from the publisher at 1-800-982-1590 within the U.S. or 1-872-386-0200 outside the U.S.

Last winter Chancellor Kenneth A. and Mary Ann Shaw headed a delegation of University representatives that traveled to Asia to meet and confer with international alumni. Shown with the Chancellor (left) in Kuala Lumpur are Jaafar Kamin G'73 and his wife, Noraini Zainul. Kamin is the director general of Radio Television Malaysia.

As global events continue to influence our lives in everything from financial markets to the products we buy, the University increasingly turns to international alumni for their insights on world affairs.

ALUMNI COUNCILS

One of the things you can say about our alumni groups is that they're made up of energetic people. In fact, sometimes groups are so busy that they unknowingly overlap activities, creating scheduling conflicts. To sort this out, a committee of the National Alumni Association Board of Directors is considering establishing alumni councils in certain geographic regions or major metropolitan areas.

At present, different alumni groups in the same area may schedule admissions activities, athletic events, development activities, and club programming—and sometimes this causes confusion. An area alumni council would meet several times a year to set up a schedule of activities. Groups would then carry on with events they're interested in while sharing information and avoiding scheduling conflicts.

"There are people involved in one group who would like to be involved in others, but don't know what other groups are doing," explains trustee Wendy Cohen '70 of Plantation, Fla., a member of the committee. "For instance, we'd like our admissions representatives to participate in club activities, but they don't always know about them."

Beverly Barr Vaughn '54 of Penfield, N.Y., who chairs the committee on clubs, says: "Times are changing. The lives of alumni are more demanding and these councils can deal with that. In addition, the councils will link more alumni to the University."

Cohen agrees. "The councils will also serve as umbrella organizations," she says. "Clubs can meet with the councils and get direction while still dealing with their separate memberships. It offers great advantages."

TRAVELS WITH SU

"Traveling with the University is the best possible way to see the world." That's what Dick Fay '44 thinks, and he speaks from experience. "You're with people of similar interests and under the care of professionals who make top-class arrangements," he says.

Fay, of Pleasantville, N.Y., a limited partner with Goldman Sachs & Co., began taking SU trips with his late wife, Joann Olson Fay '44. Now he goes with another widower.

In 1998 he took a trip to northern Italy and a cruise on the Rhine and Moselle rivers. Last year he enjoyed a trip on the Danube.

After three days in Florence, the group went across the Apennines into the Po Valley, where they boarded a boat and traveled down the Po River. "We stopped at picturesque spots along the way, and whenever we did, knowledgeable English-speaking guides led our group," Fay says. "We ended the tour with several days in Venice."

Fay admits he favors cruises. "You get on that boat, put your luggage in the stateroom, and never have to worry about anything again," he laughs. "No making travel arrangements or looking for guides to hire."

He enjoys the other university groups that frequently take the same trips. "Because the trips are educational in nature, they often feature lecturers who talk about the places we're visiting," he says. "If there's no speaker from Syracuse, we're welcome to sit in on another college's talks."

For further information on SU travel offerings, ranging from cruises to wildlife safaris, contact Tina Casella at the Office of Alumni Relations, 1-800-SUALUMS (782-5867), e-mail cscasell@syr.edu

Rosemary Somich '74

Rosemary Whitman Somich's commitment to nursing and the college that developed her skills is not a sometime thing. "Syracuse is like home to me," she says. "What I learned there enabled me to do anything. Despite the dramatic changes in health care, Syracuse gave me the fundamentals and provided a family-oriented base."

To express her gratitude, Somich and husband Michael '73 established a $30,000 endowment to fund technical research and innovation in nursing. But her devotion goes further; Somich is the alumni chair of the college's Visiting Committee, intensely involved in developing programs to keep alumni connected to the school.

After graduating from SU, Somich worked at Strong Memorial Hospital while securing a master's degree in psychiatric mental health nursing consultation and education from the University of Rochester. She then developed her own job as a liaison between psychiatry and the general hospital until she left to raise a family.

In Chicago, Somich threw herself into community activism, particularly with her church parish. She and another nurse are discussing developing a parish nursing program.

"Nursing is primarily health promotion," she explains. "Parish nurses can offer services such as health fairs, parent counseling, and educational programs. I like keeping healthy people healthy."

She's also an adult staff member of Operation Snowball, a peer group that helps teens develop leadership skills and promote healthy lifestyles, particularly through drug and alcohol prevention. She's very proud that her 17-year-old daughter was selected to visit Australia last summer to help establish the program there.

Somich finds her work with the College of Nursing enormously satisfying. "We want to link students with alumni during their academic careers to enhance students' education and create a career mentoring job placement network," she says. "We're now offering focus groups, meeting with alumni in different areas to hear their ideas about what they'd like their alumni association to do. It's important to continue our connection with a college that's done so much for all of us."

Mitch ^{92, G'93} Messenger

Scratch the surface of that high-powered manager of media and talent relations, and you'll find someone in love with the entertainment business. But what else would you expect from a man who enthusiastically played Otto the Orange for two years?

"I've been in Los Angeles for five years," says Mitch Messenger, "and I still get chills walking onto the studio lot. This is the most exciting business in the world."

Messenger has come a long way in a very short time. As manager of media and talent relations for Columbia Tri-Star Television Distribution, he's in charge of seeing that all the company's syndicated shows get the proper attention, whether it's a rerun of Seinfeld or something produced specifically for syndication, like V.I.P., Pamela Anderson's new show.

Messenger is the first to admit that work opportunities provided by Syracuse University laid the groundwork for his current success. He started his career while still an undergraduate, serving internships with 48 Hours in New York City and WTVH-TV in Syracuse. While a graduate student in the S.I. Newhouse School of Public Communications, he secured internships on his own with the White House's media affairs office and Jim Henson Productions in New York.

He moved to Los Angeles for a job with MGM-United Artists as a publicity associate, and then shifted to Buena Vista International Television, Disney's international division, before joining Columbia Tri-Star.

Messenger holds firmly to his SU connections. He's co-president of the Southern California Alumni Club and organized one of its most popular networking activities—weekly softball games. In an effort to provide other SU students with the same experience he found so valuable, last winter he helped out with the annual Newhouse student visit to Hollywood, the same trip he took as a grad student that persuaded him to head west.

"The University gave me an experience second to none, academically and in extracurricular activities," he says. "I played Otto because I felt it was a unique way to root my heart out for my University. I still feel that way."

Elizabeth Gomez G'83

Elizabeth Gomez is proud she was the first in her family to go to college. The New York City native earned a bachelor's degree from SU's School of Social Work through the Higher Education Opportunity Program (HEOP), and is now executive director of the Los Angeles Youth Network (LAYN), a private non-profit organization that helps runaway and homeless children ages 12 to 20.

"Living on campus opened my eyes to a whole world I wouldn't have known otherwise," she says. "Different cultures, different people, different opportunities—it gave me things to aspire to."

Encouraged by her positive experiences, Gomez has remained very involved with the University, participating in Coming Back Together (CBT) and becoming a member of the CBT 6 National Honorary Alumni Committee. "Such events allow people who made it through college and are successful to come back as role models for younger kids," she says.

After graduation Gomez worked in an upstate juvenile detention facility for females. She then worked in Florida before moving to a job with Travelers Aid Society of Los Angeles/Teen Canteen. Later she joined LAYN and rose through the ranks to become executive director in 1992.

Each year LAYN provides counseling, a drop-in center, shelter, and other services to about 600 of Los Angeles County's estimated 12,000 homeless children. Staff and peer educators seek out homeless children and tell them about such services as substance abuse prevention and intervention, HIV/AIDS risk reduction counseling, and independent living and job training. LAYN reunites homeless youths with their families, places them in group or foster homes, or helps them live independently when they are able.

"I guess I'm a true social worker—the most important part of my job is helping children," she says. "Young people who go through our stabilization program have a 78 percent success rate. We're one of the national models for working with runaway and homeless kids."

sherry Russell '83

In the advertising game, every day is a new challenge, and Sherry Martin Russell likes that. As art director, vice president, and partner at Mark Russell & Associates in Syracuse, she concentrates on keeping the agency's work fresh and energized.

Russell, who graduated from SU's College of Visual and Performing Arts with a degree in advertising design, met her future husband and partner, Mark, at her first job. "After we were married we were young and fearless, with nothing to lose, so we went out on our own," she says.

They're very far from losing. Last year the agency's 74 employees serviced 30 clients to earn billings of $45 million. The agency's flagship accounts include Frontier Corp., Welch Allyn Inc., Carrier Corp., Gold's Gym, and Turning Stone Casino. Russell is responsible for creative concepts, and design and illustration projects, including logos, newsletters, brochures, new product packaging, and print, radio, and television ads.

"We work with clients who have their own ideas about presenting their products," she says. "We really believe in educating clients about the benefits of doing things the way we suggest."

Educating people is much on Russell's mind, which is why she's embarking on an innovative venture with the S.I. Newhouse School of Public Communications. Although still in the development stage, a portfolio center will eventually be established by Russell and the school.

"We'll create a mini-advertising agency, pairing student art directors with student copywriters," she explains. "They'll form strategies, develop concepts, and execute comprehensive campaigns. This will allow them to build better portfolios, which will make them considerably more marketable, and agencies will benefit because students will be much better prepared."

Russell's agency has used SU interns for many years. "Not everyone can be an intern, however, so this will give a similar experience within the school," she explains. "With the portfolio center, everybody will win."

sfaramarz Samie⁹⁵

The computer monitor glows with hues of vibrant red, blue, and yellow—a curious rainbow to the uninitiated, but to Faramarz Samie, a colorful patchwork that speaks volumes.

Surrounded by PCs, Samie sits in an optical mapping laboratory at the SUNY Health Science Center at Syracuse. His research on laboratory mice examines familial hypertrophic cardiomyopathy—a genetic heart disease affecting millions of people in which the walls of the heart become thick and scarred, sometimes resulting in sudden death. “The research on these mice may explain the cause of this sudden death,” Samie says. His research is funded through a fellowship from the Howard Hughes Medical Institute.

As a bioengineering major in the L.C. Smith College of Engineering and Computer Science, Samie asked his advisor, Professor Steven Chamberlain, if there were any opportunities in research for freshmen with very little background. Chamberlain pointed him to the Institute for Sensory Research with a simple project: study the optic nerve of the horseshoe crab. “Initially it was just to get experience, but it turned out to be my honors thesis,” Samie says.

That four-year study culminated in an article Samie wrote for Visual Neuroscience and cemented his interest in research. “When I started medical school I realized I enjoyed the work I’d done at Syracuse and wanted to continue,” he says.

Samie is now pursuing a doctoral degree in pharmacology, along with a medical degree. “Ultimately I want to become a cardiologist and work at an academic institution where I can have both research and clinical duties,” he says.

Samie says he’s grateful for the quality of instruction he received at SU. “The Department of Bioengineering and Neuroscience is the model for student-centered research,” he says. “The faculty are at the frontiers of their fields, yet they are fully dedicated to teaching. Without the mentoring I received at Syracuse, I wouldn’t be where I am today.”

marvin Harrison⁹⁵

Even in the big-talent, over-achieving world of professional football, Marvin Harrison stands out. For two straight seasons the wide receiver has led the Indianapolis Colts in receptions, receiving yards, and receiving touchdowns. Last year he ranked 14th in receptions for the entire NFL. This comes as no surprise to his Syracuse University fans; in 1995 he was All-American and the University's Most Valuable Player.

"God gave me a talent for speed and using my hands to catch a football," Harrison says modestly. "So I try to improve myself by working on the things I don't have, like strength."

Harrison thrives on competition. "At the college level, everyone is talented but to different degrees," he says. "In the NFL, talent is so much more advanced that every week is like a playoff game. I like going out to try to beat these guys every week."

Harrison manages to stay focused despite the adulation routinely heaped on professional athletes. "I think about my family and what they've done with their lives. Deep in my heart

I'm playing for them as well as my teammates," he says.

That altruistic streak shows up in another of his causes: financially sponsoring a minority or low-income student in SU's summer program Operation Link-Up, which brings high school juniors to campus to give them a jump-start on college.

"I stay in touch the next year and when the student enrolls at Syracuse, I come to campus to show the person around and encourage him or her to do their best," he says. "I feel good knowing I've helped at least one person a year continue with their education."

Harrison is continuing his own schooling and is currently just six credits shy of completing a master's degree in consumer studies in the College for Human Development.

"Syracuse taught me I could combine football and education," he says. "Football isn't going to last forever. I value knowing I don't have to rely only on my athletic talent. I can go out and pursue another career."

hank Greenwald⁵⁷

oward "Hank" Greenwald calls them as he sees them. Throughout his career as a radio sportscaster, he has worked hard to present the play-by-play with a reporter's objectivity.

"That goes back to my education," Greenwald says. "Professor Larry Myers instilled in his students the idea that sports broadcasters shouldn't just root for a team. They should strive to present the whole picture."

After graduating from the School of Journalism, fore-runner to the S.I. Newhouse School of Public Communications, Greenwald covered SU football and professional basketball in San Francisco. But baseball became the heart of Greenwald's career; he spent 16 years with the San Francisco Giants, and two with the New York Yankees.

For Greenwald, radio communicates in a way unmatched by television. "When I was young, radio captured my imagination," he says. "A radio broadcaster has tremendous influence over how people react to baseball. The words are what help them embrace the game."

Radio can make great demands on all of a broadcaster's skills. During Greenwald's early years working for minor league teams like the Syracuse Chiefs, the clubs lacked the money to bring him along for away-games. So Greenwald re-created the games without even being there.

"I got the information from Western Union tickertape," he explains. "Translating that into a live-sounding broadcast really drew on my creative powers." Although unofficially retired, Greenwald still covers Giants games once a week for CBS Radio. "Baseball was what I always wanted to do," he says. "Now I enjoy passing along the traditions of the game to younger generations."
